Did You Know...

How's the bunny connected to Easter? According to University of Florida's Center for Children's Literature and Culture, the origin of the celebration – and the Easter bunny – can be traced back to 13th century, pre-Christian Germany, when people worshiped several gods and goddesses. The Teutonic deity Eostra was the goddess of spring and fertility, and feasts were held in her honor on the Vernal Equinox. Her symbol was the rabbit because of the animal's high reproduction rate. ## First Navajo appointed to the Farmington City Council

DH Tri-Cities | By Debra Mayeux Tri City Record
Published Wednesday, Mar 27, 2024 11:45 AM

Applause erupted throughout the Farmington City Council chambers Tuesday when the first Navajo was appointed to the council in the history of the governing body.

Herman Buck, 50, of Farmington, was appointed to fill the District 2 seat during the March 26 meeting by Farmington Mayor Nate Duckett, who said Buck "represents the type of servant leadership we are looking for."

"There is a historic component to this. It's a historic coincidence - I didn't go into this interview process looking for a race, creed or code. I was looking for someone of service," Duckett said. "It is certainly historic that we have confirmed Mr. Herman Buck, who is a member of the Navajo Nation. Everyone in this room and community should be excited."

Buck is a Shiprock High School graduate, who speaks Navajo and English. He is a business owner, who took over his father's business, Buck's Tire and Towing, which has been open for 40 years.

Buck applied for the position which opened in December, with the resignation of Sean Sharer, who moved outside the district.

"I put in for City Council to help the city as much as I could - to move the city forward," Buck said, adding that he loves this city.

Buck has lived in District 2 for 15 years with his wife of 26 years, Jennifer Reyes Buck. They have daughters and two grandchildren.

Buck was one of 10 applicants for the council seat.

"I'm thrilled with the 10 people we got to interview," Duckett said, adding that he, Assistant City Manager Shana Reeves and former Mayor Tom Taylor participated in the interview process.

Duckett said he was sure that any of the 10 people who put their names in "would do their due diligence to this community," but Buck offered the council "a unique opportunity" and stood out because "he is serving now in his capacity in many different areas."

Buck is a drummer for the music ministry at Journey Church and provides ministry to detainees at the San Juan County Detention Center.

The Rev. David Flores, pastor of Journey Church, was at Tuesday's meeting. He said Buck would bring a "different perspective" to the council.

"I think he's going to do an excellent job," Flores said, adding he is "a great asset with his community mindedness."

Buck also has been the owner of Punch's Boxing Club, in which he mentors youths through boxing, for 15 years.

Councilor Linda Rodgers brought this up, calling Buck, "Punch" when she congratulated him on the appointment.

"I've known him for a lot of years," she said, adding the two shared a "lengthy discussion" about the council. "I know him to be a man of integrity and honesty. I look forward to serving with you over the next 18 months."

Rodgers made the motion to approve the appointment, and Councilor Janis Jakino seconded the motion.

"The faces in this room have caused a swell of pride," Jakino said, pointing out "the magnitude of this moment" and saying, "I'm very proud to serve alongside Mr. Buck."

The appointment closes out Sharer's term. Buck would need to run for reelection to continue serving on the council.

Navajo Nation to receive 2 new food banks amidst 'disturbing' hunger levels

SOUTHERN UTAH NEWS

by: Megan Brugger

Posted: Mar 6, 2024 / 08:04 PM MST

SAN JUAN COUNTY, Utah (ABC4) - Two new food pantries are opening on the Navajo Nation as Utah Food Bank expands its services across San Juan County.

The pantries will open on the portion of the Navajo Nation that occupies Utah, and will "greatly enhance food resources in the area, reducing the remarkable distance that residents have had to go previously to access food," a press release states.

The Navajo Nation is classified as a food desert, as average driving times to food resources can take up to several hours in just one direction.

Additionally, the pantries will provide much-needed job opportunities, the release states. With that, having paid staff working at the pantries will allow the operating hours to be more regular and reliable.

San Juan County residents reportedly face significantly higher hunger rates compared to the state average, with 17% reporting food insecurity, as opposed to 10% statewide, as stated in the press release.

"Disturbingly, childhood hunger is even more prevalent," the release states. 20% of children are uncertain about their next meal, which is double the statewide average.

Utah Food Bank is aiming to address the specific needs of the people on the Navajo Nation, reportedly committing to distributing culturally appropriate food that can be safely stored and cooked.

Each of the pantries will have a special focus on procuring and distributing foods that fit the Navajo diet and preference, in addition to significantly increasing the amount of fresh produce available in the area, the release states.

Let there be light! Solar panels to provide electricity for rural Navajo families

Residences, ranging from a single child to multiple, may not have running water as well

By Alx Lee Tri-City Record Reporter
Wednesday, Mar 27, 2024

In partnership with Heart of America and Central Consolidated School District, 24 families from Shiprock to Naschitti will receive electricity from installed solar panels at their residences.

The families are under the McKinney Vento program, an initiative to serve students who qualify as homeless.

Recent data show 750 students fit the federal definition of homeless, according to Elfreda Harvey, social and safety net coordinator. That definition includes a condition in which an individual or family lacks a fixed, regular, nighttime residence or is at imminent risk of losing their housing.

On Monday, California Polytechnic State University students, Central Consolidated administration and Heart of America staff joined together at the district office for introductions, background and cultural teachings before setting out to install the panels.

"You're going see a lot of things this week with our families, and you're going to experience a lot of things with our families that you probably haven't seen or experienced before," Harvey said, "So I'll ask that you keep an open mindset."

Before arriving on the reservation, a cultural team researched the Navajo Nation to provide the team with knowledge about the region.

Gina Chun, senior in construction management, was a part of the team that researched the political structure and history of the Navajo Nation.

Chun said in her research that the impact of the pandemic was a main focal point and that the team could go onto the land with that in mind.

However, on a second trip, Chun said her research meant very little compared with the knowledge gained by spending time with the community.

On Tuesday, vehicles were loaded with supplies and snow began to fall as the team partook in a smudging led by Berlinda Begay, bilingual multicultural education coordinator.

The solar team

In Monday's preparation, the team spread across the A Gym in Shiprock to begin with stretches before digging into the parts of the panels.

Spread across the gym, Cal Poly students worked together to compile sets that included four panels, two lights, one battery and a solar-powered lantern.

Each panel generates 100 watts, a total of 400 watts in each set. The battery holds 1,000 watts.

Mylo Fowler of Heart of America explained the battery is also portable once charged. Families have taken the battery to family events including cultural milestones, he said.

Thus far, Heart of America has connected 200 homes with solar power, according to Fowler. The goal is to power every home on the reservation with solar energy.

Heart of America, California Polytechnic State University students, and Central Consolidated administration stand together on March 25 at the Central Consolidated district office before departing for the day to install panels at residences. (Brad Ryan/Special to Tri-City Record)

Solv Energy was a trip sponsor, but students also raised funds during their spring break.

While students prepped sets a team also compiled bags of school supplies and games for the families.

During the pandemic, 10,000 bags were distributed by Heart of America, Fowler said.

Fowler also spoke to an encounter that impacted him. A grandmother living in Shiprock with her grandchildren had no electricity and was burying insulin in the ground with rocks to keep the medicine cold.

After receiving the solar panels, the family made jello using a fridge gifted to them. Fowler described it as game changing.

The Buildout: Choice Broadband, Tarana boost speeds for Navajo Nation

Choice Broadband, the wireless broadband arm of the Navajo Tribal Utility Authority, has completed the deployment of a fixed wireless network in Tohatchi, New Mexico. Choice Broadband partnered with Tarana to deploy the supplier's next-generation fixed wireless access (ngFWA) technology to reach "nearly 400 previously unreachable locations," marking "the first of many upgraded networks that will equip residents and businesses of Navajo Nation," the companies said in a press release. With the new network launch, those locations will go from receiving download speeds of roughly 9 Mbit/s to receiving speeds up to 100 Mbit/s, they added.

USDA investing $76.5M to bring clean energy to Navajo Nation

by: Trevor Myers

Posted: Mar 26, 2024 / 03:57 PM MDT

SALT LAKE CITY (ABC4) – The United States Department of Agriculture Rural Development announced on Tuesday that it is investing $76.5 million to expand the Red Mesa Tapaha Solar Farm, according to a press release.

According to USDA Rural Development, the expansion is expected to provide clean energy to approximately 36,000 homes, businesses and farms – in addition to providing more than 200 local construction jobs.

According to Navajo Tribal Utility Authority, the Red Mesa Tapaha Solar Farm is a 500-acre project that is expected to bring power to nearly 20 communities across Utah.

Over the life of the project – which is scheduled to last about 25 years – NTUA said the solar farm is projected to bring in more than $20 million in revenue for the Navajo Nation.

According to USDA Rural Development, the NTUA is expected to use the loan funds to purchase single-axis tracking solar arrays, which would allow for “maximum energy absorption.”

“Projected revenues will help stabilize electric rates, connect unserved families to electricity, enable broadband access and create permanent employment,” USDA Rural Development said in the release.

USDA Rural Development provides financial support to, in part, “improve the quality of life for millions of Americans in rural areas.” It is partnered with NTUA to continue providing financing for utilities as well as improving access to reliable infrastructure.

“Tribal lands are often in remote areas and unable to easily connect to a grid,” USDA Rural Development Utah State Director Michele Weaver said in a press release. “Today’s announcement reinforces President Biden’s commitment to equal opportunity and support for underserved communities through the federal government.”

The USDA investment is part of President Biden’s Justice40 Initiative, which aims to ensure 40% of benefits from Federal investments in areas such as climate and clean energy help cover marginalized communities.

MEMORIAL FOR NAVAJO CODE TALKERS, NMI MARINE SCOUTS PUSHED

February 13, 2024 11:57 a.m

The leadership of the 17th Saipan and Northern Islands Municipal Council recently endorsed the funding request of Gov. Arnold I. Palacios to install a permanent commemorative memorial court of honor for the Marianas marine scouts and the Navajo code talkers, in appreciation for the ultimate sacrifice by these two groups in the Battle of Saipan: Operation Forager from June 15 to July 9, 1944, by the code talkers and from August 1944 to September 1945 by some 50 Chamorro and Carolinian marine scouts recruited by the U.S. Marines.

On Aug. 14, 1982, over 30 years later following the Battle of Saipan, U.S. President Ronald Regan declared National Navajo Code Talkers Day, saying the code talkers played an instrumental role in the Pacific War from 1942 to 1945.

A little over 50 years later, on Jan. 31, 2000, Robert Underwood, who was the Guam delegate to the U.S. House of Representatives, stood and eloquently delivered before the U.S. House of Representatives a rousing "At Last America Remembers Marianas Scouts" speech, naming by their full names the stewards of peace in the Battle of Saipan's Operation Forager (Ignacio Reyes Ada, Antonio M. Aguon, Antonio Angailen, Pedro SN. Attao, Santiago Miyasaki Babauta, Antonio Manahane, Benavente, Juan V. Benavente, Daniel T. Borja, Gregorio Flores Borja, Gregorio Camacho Cabrera, Juan Camacho Cabrera, Mafnas, Jose Blas Magofna, Miguel Blaz Magofna, Pedro Mettao, Nicolas Quidachai Muna, Francisco Nekai, Juan Quitugua Norita, Isidro Limes Ogarto, Francisco C. Palacios, Joaquin B. Saures, Felipe McGuinness Seman, Juan Malus Tagabuel, Benedicto Satur Taisacan, Antonio Camacho Tenorio, Antonio P. Tenorio, Vicente Olaitiman Taman, Miguel Pangelinan Tenorio, Pedro Peter Teregeyo, and Manuel Seman Villagomez).

In a letter of support to Carmen G. Cantor, assistant secretary for the Office of Insular and International Affairs, the Saipan council leadership underscored the role of the code talkers as pivotal in their enigmatic way of encoding messages that literally confused the Japanese command post on the location of the U.S. soldiers and the direction Operation Forager was headed, and pivoted the manner in which World War II ended in the Battle of Saipan.

For their part, after the major bombardment on Saipan by the combined forces of the U.S. Marines, Army and Navy, a few carefully vetted local civilians were conscripted into the U.S. Marine battalion: their singular duty was to ensure the continuing safety of U.S. soldiers and local civilians following Operation Forager. These civilian marines were chosen by the U.S. Marines because of their insights and knowledge on Japanese military hideouts in tunnels and caves, including the locations of the Japanese gun emplacements, no less their familiarity of the terrains throughout Saipan and fluency in the Japanese language.

The local council leadership is joined by former governor Juan N. Babauta, a former CNMI Washington representative and author-publisher of Now for Then: The Marianas Marine Scouts, who said: "As a former Washington representative and former CNMI governor, I stand shoulder-to-shoulder with...Gov. Arnold I. Palacios' funding assistance for the permanent installation of a well-deserved court of honor for the Navajo Code Talkers and the Marianas Marine Scouts on Saipan at the American Memorial Park or other suitable locations on Saipan."

Voting Rights Win in New Mexico: Navajo Community Gains Equal Opportunity at the Polls

Native News Online Staff

Mon, March 25, 2024 at 8:59 PM MDT

Native Vote 2024. The San Juan County in New Mexico has settled a lawsuit that challenged the county's 2021 redistricting map, which aimed to dilute the voting power of Navajo voters.

The map packed Navajo citizens into District 1, which had an 83% Native American Voting Age Population (VAP), while reducing the Native American VAP in District 2 below the level necessary to provide Navajo voters with an equal opportunity to elect candidates of their choice, as required by Section 2 of the federal Voting Rights Act. This meant Navajo voters had an equal ability to elect preferred candidates in just one out of five districts, despite Navajo citizens making up roughly 40% of the county's total population.

The Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, the UCLA Voting Rights Project (UCLA VRP), the ACLU of New Mexico, the law firm DLA Piper, and the Navajo Nation Department of Justice on Monday announced the voting rights victory. The groups brought the lawsuit on behalf of the Navajo Nation, the Navajo Nation Human Rights Commission, and individual Navajo voters in San Juan County.

The suppression of the voting power of the Navajo residents has made it harder to achieve important policy priorities, such as providing and maintaining critical infrastructure on Navajo Nation land.

The county agreed to settle the lawsuit by enacting a new map negotiated by the plaintiffs which ensures a more equitable distribution of the Navajo population, with 74% Native American VAP in District 1 and 70% in District 2. The new map will remain in place through the 2030 Census, with the two new Navajo opportunity districts first up for election in 2026. The voting rights victory is a testament to the tireless efforts of the Navajo Nation and its allies in standing up against injustice and on behalf of the rights of the Navajo people.

"The settlement we reached with San Juan County, NM, is a victory for the Navajo Nation and the Navajo People," said Ethel Branch, Attorney General of the Navajo Nation Department of Justice. "In exercising our sovereign right, we secured justice for Navajo voters in San Juan County. For decades, and despite being the majority, our people were only able to elect one Navajo Commissioner in San Juan County. Now we have an opportunity to change that through more equal treatment of Navajo votes in the County redistricting process."

NAVAJO SURGEON, DR. LORI ALVORD SPEAKS ON BLENDING SPIRITUALITY & MODERN MEDICINE

MATTHEW REED – MARCH 6, 2024

Dr. Lori Alvord, the first Navajo board certified surgeon, discussed how she blends modern medicine with Navajo ceremonies and the importance of spirituality for healing at the Grand Soldier Ballroom at the Carnegie Hotel in Johnson City on Monday, March 4.

Alvord is an accomplished board-certified surgeon, Stanford University of Medicine alumni, associate faculty member at Johns Hopkins School of Public Health and a published author and avid speaker. She has also been featured in the National Library of Medicine magazine and on a PBS documentary, Medicine Women.

Alvord grew up in the Navajo Nation where from a young age she learned the importance of community, nature and spirituality. She was able to watch the healing power that these things held for her people and today she uses these to help her patients along with her expertise in modern medicine, allowing and encouraging her patients to participate in ceremonies with their community.

Alvord told how she followed a winding path that led her to becoming a surgeon and that it was never her original plan. She had grown up wanting to be a teacher like her grandmother who was one of the first Navajo teachers. However, in high school she began to study and work in a pharmacy. She wanted to pursue this and was talked into attending Dartmouth College, an Ivy league school in New Hampshire, with accommodations for Native American student, only to find out that they did not have a pharmacy program. She decided to pursue medicine for the moment, however at the time she struggled at the time.

She began her lecture with a story of a Night Chant, a Navajo healing ceremony. She told how the entire community had come together to help heal a young woman; however, she highlighted this lady was not her patient.

"She was tall, you could tell by the length of blankets wrapped in front of her. She was lovely, around her head was tied a red sash, but she was not my patient," told Alvord.

She told how she could tell this young woman was clearly ill and how the community had come together in the hogan, a Navajo house. They were there to perform the Night Chant and help this young lady heal.

The songs of the Night Chant tell of the beauty of the Navajo universe, a house made of dawn and another made of evening light and another of dark cloud with jagged lightning.

"Happily may I walk, happily with abundant showers may I walk, happily with abundant pollen of plants may I walk, happily may I walk. May it be beautiful before me, may it be beautiful behind me, may it be beautiful above me, may it be beautiful below me and may it be beautiful all around me. In beauty it is finished," Alvord shared with us a piece of the Night Chant.

She told how magical and powerful ceremonies could be and how she yearned for that for her patients who did not have that. She wished for them to have spirituality and community to support them.

Alvord told about spiral petroglyphs in the mountains of the Navajo Nation that hold ancient wisdom and sand paintings of the Ye'ii, spiritual beings. She tells how patients will sit on these sand paintings and prayer will be said over them for healing.

"In some ways, it [drawing the sand paintings] is harder than surgery," said Alvord while describing the ceremony.

Alvord discussed how the Navajo have a belief that illness is disharmony or imbalance in any area of life. Ceremony helps one become more connected to the world and the creator and helps restore balance in life. The Navajo believe that all things are connected and that the mind has a great power to help the body heal.

This is connected to their belief that animals and the environment are directly connected to the people of the land, while that land is sick so will the people be. Alvord discussed how sound ecological practices are also a key part of keeping the Navajo people healthy and connected to the world around them.

"We say that we should live so that five generations down are being protected," said Alvord.

Alvord also pointed out that the belief of the Navajo in positive thought and the modern studies of mind-body medicine in psychological and medical field overlap and are often consistent with each other on the positive healing effects the mind can have for the body.

Alvord highlighted several examples including avoiding stress and negative thoughts during pregnancy and psychological stresses negative affect on the immune system, both of which are supported by Navajo belief and modern medicine.

She also highlighted that there is common use of the senses in healing such as using guided visualizations or sound/music therapy to heal in a similar way to how ceremonies are used for the Navajo. That art, music and poetry can be used to heal emotionally and thus help heal physically just as the sand paintings help the Navajo heal.

Alvord is an accomplished surgeon who has been using her spirituality with modern medicine to help her patients heal in ways that others have not. She described how spirituality and community are important for healing and how Navajo medicine has been implementing techniques that are now becoming widely accepted in the modern medicine world. These techniques and her journey to mastering them are highlighted in her book, The Scalpel and the Silver Bear: The First Navajo Woman Surgeon Combines Western Medicine and Traditional Healing.

Women's History Month: March 2024

March 06, 2024

Press Release Number CB24-FF.03

National Women's History Month honors the successes and sacrifices of U.S. women. It dates to March 8, 1857, when hundreds of women from New York City garment and textile factories rallied to protest harsh working conditions. In 1909, New York City became the site of the nation's first Women's Day celebration, a year after 15,000 women there marched to demand shorter working hours, better pay, an end to child labor and the right to vote. More than seven decades later in 1981, Congress set aside the second week of March as National Women's History Week. Six years later, Congress expanded the week to a month. As we celebrate Women's History Month, we reflect upon the advances women have made, including increased earnings, educational attainment and job opportunities.

The following facts are possible thanks to the invaluable responses to U.S. Census Bureau surveys. We appreciate the public's cooperation as we measure America's people, places and economy.

Written by:

Nick Orsini, Associate Director for Economic Programs

As part of our ongoing commitment to innovation and to address our many stakeholder needs, the Economic Directorate has been working across all areas of the U.S. Census Bureau to reengineer our annual economic surveys. This process began in 2015, when the Census Bureau asked the Committee on National Statistics (CNSTAT) of the National Academies of Science, Engineering and Medicine to assemble a panel to conduct a comprehensive review of our annual economic surveys. Their findings and recommendations are summarized in this 2018 report "Reengineering the Census Bureau's Annual Economic Surveys," resulting in the Annual Integrated Economic Survey \(AIES\) that began data collection March 15.

Seven legacy annual economic surveys listed below have all had their final releases in their current format and are now integrated into a single survey – the AIES.

More Counties Saw Population Gains in 2023

MARCH 14, 2024 – More U.S. counties experienced population gains than losses in 2023, as counties in the South saw faster growth and more Northeast and Midwest counties had population losses turn to gains, according to the U.S. Census Bureau's Vintage 2023 estimates of population and components of change released today.

Approximately 60% (1,876) of U.S. counties gained population from 2022 to 2023, an increase from the 52% of counties (1,649) that experienced population growth between 2021 and 2022. Among the nation's 3,144 counties, the average change from 2022 to 2023 was 0.29%, up from 0.17% the previous year.

"Domestic migration patterns are changing, and the impact on counties is especially evident," said Lauren Bowers, chief of the Census Bureau's Population Estimates Branch. "Areas which experienced high levels of domestic out-migration during the pandemic, such as in the Midwest and Northeast, are now seeing more counties with population growth. Meanwhile, county population growth is slowing down out west, such as in Arizona and Idaho."
